Borders and Border Spaces in the EU

The FRONTM doctoral seminar brings together a dozen of PhD students of the network's members for an interdisciplinary and international discussion around the theme of "borders and European integration". Emphasis is given to interdisciplinary and intersectoral knowledge exchange between young researchers from different cross-border territories. Doctoral students have the opportunity to present papers that will be discussed and commented by their peers and by their supervisors. This seminar is essential for the association of young researchers to the Jean Monnet Network, but also to prepare a PhD research cahier (Cahier FARE) which brings together the PhD papers and will thus represent one of the research outputs of FRONTM.

FRONTM is the first Jean Monnet network which has been obtained by France within the framework of the EU's Erasmus+ activity program. It brings together 3 Centres of excellence and 7 Jean Monnet Chairs both from Europe and Canada and its aim is to develop international and multidisciplinary research linking European Studies and Border Studies, i.e. two so far not much interconnected fields of study. Our network seeks to facilitate a new reading of the role of the borders in European integration by considering that there is not only one model of perception and management of borders in and around the European Union, but that these also depend on the specificity of each border region concerned.

During 3 years, our network will carry out exchanges of knowledge and practice on five different models of management of EU borders by gathering young researchers, PhD students and citizen associations. A comparative analysis will also be conducted between the EU and Canada in order to evaluate if European border models could be transposed in other regions throughout the world. The network plans to organize a doctoral seminar, several research seminars and a number of focus-groups which will allow to give an overview also of the perception of borders by representatives of the civil society situated in cross-border territories. The objective is to develop a typology of models on perception and management of borders in the EU corresponding to political needs and to the expectations of European people.
